4. Grow more barley and possibly double-crop with grain sorghum.

5. Make small grain silage to replace corn silage.

There is a possibility that more silo gas is produced by SLB corn than by non-infected corn. Regardless of what type corn went into the silo, the production of nitrogen dioxide gas is always a possibility. Precautions against poisoning from the gas are always indicated. See that the silo and silo room are properly ventilated during filling and for at least two weeks after the silo is filled. Keep all persons and animals away from the silo immediately after filling!

Call, write, or drop by the County Extension office for additional information regarding the Corn Southern Leaf Blight.
